MSc-GH program staff organizes events and workshops throughout the academic year to prepare first-year students for the field-based research requirements of the program. As an MSc student, you have to be proactive, be organized, plan your work, review your plans and work your plan, find a topic that engages you and your advisors, take ownership for your fieldwork, face the challenges, communicate regularly with supervisors, and program staff and ask for help.

Proposal Writing Basics - October

What does a good research proposal include? How should you organize the information that you need to present? How comprehensive is your background and literature review expected to be for a proposal? This workshop uses past fieldwork proposals to explore and explain the structure of a well-crafted research proposal.
