The Time has Come for a Reset in U.S. - China Relations. What Will That Look Like?

Speaker: James McGregor, Greater China Chairman for APCO Worldwide

ABSTRACT:

The time has come for a reset in US-China relations with a focus on how the two countries can make room for mutual prosperity and genuine cooperation on geopolitical and security threats. The DNA of our political systems is very different. But our economies, and increasingly our societies, are deeply intertwined. America has to accept that China is on its way to building a global economic, political and military footprint to rival the US. The Chinese leadership has to accept that as world's second largest economy and an international trade and finance powerhouse, China will have to begin genuinely playing by global rules. The answer may be for China and the US to treat each other as equals, and to have reciprocity as the bedrock that underlies our business and trade relations.
